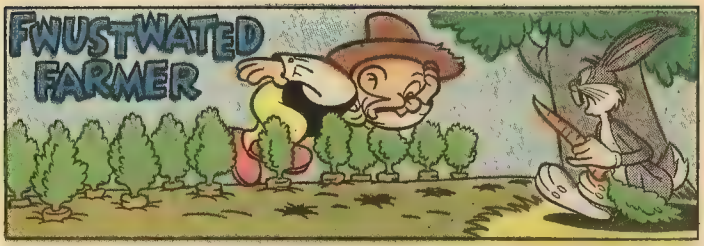
THE END



Elmer Fudd walked through his carrot patch, checking the crop he was ready to harvest.

"Oh, no! What happened here?" he cried. "There's not a single cawwot left in this whole row!"

"Hiya, Doc. What's up?" a familiar voice called from behind a tree at the edge of Elmer's garden.

"You!" Elmer raged. "Bugs Bunny; I'll bet you are wesponsible for my missing cawwots. Of all the fwustwating . . . "

"Just testing them for you, Doc," Bugs grinned. "I couldn't let you sell carrots that weren't nice and tender, could I?"

"Contwoll Contwoll" Elmer cautioned himself. "Count to ten. One, two, thwee . . . "

Slowly, Elmer got control of himself, and still counting, he turned and stalked through the garden, back to his house.

Bugs settled down under the tree and waited for Elmer to return. He had waited a long time, when he noticed a car stopping in front of Elmer's house.

"Golly, that's the doctor's car. I hope my little joke didn't make my old pal that sick," Bugs gulped guiltily.

When the doctor's car left, Bugs hopped over to the house and called to Elmer.

"Hey, Fuddsy, old pal. What's up?"

When he did not receive an answer, Bugs looked in. Elmer was sitting in the middle of the floor, tying knots in heavy twine.

"Oh, no! Speak to me, Fuddsy. It's me, Bugs," the worried rabbit called.

"What do you want now, wabbit?" Elmer asked with an air of calmness.

"What happened? The doctor was here," Bugs answered, "and I want to know why."

"I just called him for some advice. I wanted to find some way to welieve my fwustwations. He told me that working with my hands was a good way . . . it'd take my mind off things," Elmer explained patiently.

"Oh! Well, if that's all, I'll be running along. See you later," Bugs said.

"Yes, indeedy!" Elmer grinned.

For the rest of the day, Elmer continued tying knots in the twine. Finally, he held up his work to check on his progress. First he had tied the twine into small squares; then he had made the small squares into one large square which resembled a huge net.

"Heh, heh, heh," Elmer chuckled, as he folded it up and tucked it under his arm.

"Tonight, I'll just slip out into the garden and get everything weady for my big surpwise tomowwow," he smiled.

It was late at night when Elmer finished in the garden, and he yawned wearily.

"I'm mighty tired, but it was worth it. Tonight I can west in peace," he sighed.

Elmer did rest well, but he was up early the next morning. He hurried out to his carrots to inspect them again.

"Not one cawwot missing this morning," he cheered, as he walked up and down the rows, smiling happily.

"Hey, Doc! Help! Over here!"

It was Bugs calling from behind the tree again, only this time his voice seemed to be coming from up in the tree.

"What's up, Doc?" Elmer mimicked his longeared friend, as he looked up in the tree.

"I am, Fuddsy, and don't be so funny. Get me down, I seem to be caught in some kind of a net," Bugs pleaded.

"I know!" Elmer chuckled slyly. "And I have to admit the doctor was wight. Working with my hands weally welieved me of my fwustwation . . . YOU!"
